GREETINGS ON VIJAYADASHMI – OCTOBER 7
*****

JHINGANS JOTTINGS

Hi

October 9th is celebrated all over the world as World Post Day. It is actually the Day of World-Post (international mail) and not a World Day of the Post (in general). It is the day in 1874 that the oldest intergovernmental organization in existence - Universal Postal Union (UPU) was founded.

The dispatch of letters in earlier times depended on the messenger services maintained by the Kings, prominent business houses, religious and educational institutions. Franz Von Taxis is credited for setting up the first international postal service in the 16th century. The exchange of mail between Austria, Germany, The Netherlands, Italy, France, and Spain was brought under this service and henceforth was to be governed by international agreements. These bi-lateral agreements created a very complex situation where several postal rates needed to be calculated in various currencies to different units of weight according to distances in various countries.

By the 19th century the complexities reached an extreme, imagine 1200 different postal rates and the whole world was not even covered! The introduction of faster means of transport, steamships and railways, for carrying mail kept on adding to this tally. Add to this the success of the adoption of a single rate for nationwide post and invention of postage stamp in England by Sir Rowland Hill in 1840. All these factors forced the postal administrations worldwide to realize the need to standardize the rates and simplify the formalities for international mail.

At the initiative of Heinrich Von Stephan, a senior postal official of the Confederation of Northern Germany, the Swiss Government convened a conference at Bern on September 15, 1874 that was attended by delegates from 32 countries. After discussions an agreement was reached and on October 9th, 1874 a treaty establishing a General Postal Union was signed. The Bern Treaty came in to force on July 1, 1875 and in 1878 the name was changed to Universal Postal Union.

India was represented in this treaty by the British and joined as a member in its own right in July 1876. UPU holds a congress every five years and formulates new postal regulations, modifications, and updates the same. The 15th congress was to be held at

New Delhi in 1963 however the state of emergency, caused by China attacking India in 1962, forced the Government to cancel it. It was hosted by Austria in 1964. The 20th Congress held in Washington DC, USA was presided over by K R Murthy, a former Director General of India Post, which is a great honor for our country and its postal services. Yours truly attended this Congress as well as the World Stamp Expo (organized by USPS as part of the Congress) as members of the delegation representing the Republic of Nauru.

Until next week, please enjoy the rest of the newsletter.

OTHER MEDALS INDIA WON IN SYDNEY, BY BONITA BARUAH

New Delhi: A poser: How many medals did India win in Sydney where the Olympics have just come to close? One bronze? Wrong. The correct answer is one bronze and three silver-bronzes. The bronze, as everyone knows, is for weightlifter Malleswari. The silver-bronzes, though Olympics related, were not won for any sporting feat but, hold your breath, for postage stamps.

Yes, Olympics is not just about sports but about stamp collection, too. A sideshow of the Games, the Olympic stamp collectors' competition, is a big draw for philatelists. Besides the 72-strong squad to the Sydney Games, there were three Indian entries in what is known as Olympilex. "The Olympilex has become an integral part of the Games for the last six Olympics," says Madhukar Jhingan, president of the Olympic Philatelists of India. The man behind the idea is none other than the president of the International Olympic Committee, Juan Antonio Samaranch, himself an avid stamp collector.

The winners this time are philatelists Rajesh Verma from Dehradun. His collection on the First Fifty Years of the Olympics won him a silver-bronze. U V Shenoy from Mumbai, with his Hundred Years of Olympics, won two prizes – one for his collection another for an article on stamps. The third participant, T N P Rao from Bangalore, who offered his collection on Soviet Sports, drew a blank. Four years ago, at Atlanta, India's stamp collectors won two bronzes.

The screening process for sending entries is almost as difficult as choosing the Indian squad. The entries require clearance from RBI, customs, the postal department, and, believe or not, the Archaeological Survey of India. The last is mandatory because many of the stamps are invaluable and have an antique value.

THE HINDU, DELHI EDITION, OCTOBER 2, 2000, FRONT PAGE – METRO PLUS
NOT JUST A STAMP-SIZED DELIGHT BY ANJANA RAJAN

The age-old snail mail replete with its colourful stamps, postman and his bicycle bell may not be the favoured mode of communication any more. But it has quaint joys denied to those who send messages through e-mail. ANJANA RAJAN visits National Philatelic Museum on New Delhi's Parliament Street to discover a treasure trove of information....

In the good old days when Columbus sailed the ocean blue, his well-wishers back home had to wait in suspense to find out how his journey shaped up. Luckily he survived to tell his tale, even though it was a pretty mixed up one, with Indians on the wrong continent and so on. Had Columbus the options seafarers have today, he would have been in constant touch with his friends through satellite links and e-mail, and someone might well have headed him off in the right direction before he changed the course of history.

Now that technology has converted our wide world into a global village, and only seconds are required to send a message thousands of miles away, e-mail has become a favourite mode of letter writing for millions across the universe, including India. Even those who don't own a computer or Internet subscription make use of the thriving Internet cafes springing all over. Business affairs or family news, witty love letters, even hate mail between ex-spouses, all kinds of missives hurtle through cyber space day and night. It beats the courier system, since you don't have to be at home to receive the letter.

It beats airmail, since your messages reaches its destination faster than you can blink. You can send bulky documents, photographs, voice recordings, home movies, and animated greeting cards. And for those things that have more than a virtual existence, like parcels of cookies, bouquets of flowers and knitted jumpers, some agency is always ready to carry out your e-mailed instruction to the T.

There's only one thing you cannot do with your e-mail, and that is collect the stamps on the envelope. In my opinion that is a devastating disadvantage. But for all those who miss the bell of the postman's bicycle and the thrill of receiving envelopes with colourful stamps, there is a place of pilgrimage in the heart of Delhi. Step into the National Philatelic Museum on Parliament Street to revel in the beauty and marvel at the intricacies of snail mail.

This small gallery on the ground floor of the Dak Bhawan building provides the visitor a panoramic view of India's history and culture through its postage stamps. It also provides some fascinating glimpses of the development of postal services in the country since 1852.

The exhibition of postage stamps and first day covers is painstakingly laid out. It is aesthetic, brightly lit and interesting even if you are not an avid philatelist. Enlargements and sculptures provide variety. Apart from stamps and first day covers, there are prints of mail carriers of the 19th Century. The 'harkara', who transported letters from city to city, passed on his charge to the 'dakiya' whose job it was to deliver to the addressees' door. From there it was the responsibility of the 'chuprassie' to take the letter into the addressees' chamber. From the portly 'chuprassie' to the skin and bones 'harkara', it is easy to imagine the strain required in each job. There is also a map of the 'harkara' lines, or mail and parcel routes used in the Bengal Presidency in 1852, marked with Mail stage, Banghy stage, Dak Bearers stage and other symbols. All the postage stamps issued since Independence are represented. The Jai Hind series of stamps issued in 1947, bearing the lions of the Ashoka Pillar, with the words Jai Hind printed across the, seem to carry the scent of those heady years when Independence was new. The history of India's freedom struggle is told through numerous commemorative stamps. The displays are accompanied by brief explanations outlining historical and cultural events as they unfolded during the Independence movement.

As pointed out in the introductory panel, people from varied walks of life participated in the struggle for Independence. Stamps issued in memory of various personalities of those times are accompanied by paragraphs describing their lives and contribution. Going through the exhibition is a great education. Every child has heard of Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru, who appear on several stamps. But fewer know of names like the 19th Century social reformer Savitribai Phule, the first Indian woman to pursue teachers' training, who, along with her husband Jotirao Phule, championed the cause of women's education. Among numerous other freedom fighters in Pandita Ramabai, a Sanskrit scholar and educationist who worked for women's emancipation and social reform. If only our primary school youngsters could make kites out of their so-called general knowledge books and be taken round exhibitions of this sort! But that may only occur to people when a question is asked about India's postal history on 'Kaun Banega Crorepati'.

India's first postage stamps were issued in Sindh in 1852. They bore the merchant mark of the East India Company and were known as Scinde Dawks. It is interesting to learn that India was the first country to launch official air post in 1911. The route was from Allahabad to Naini. It was also one of the first countries to issue specialized airmail stamps in 1929.

Ranjit Kumar, Assistant Director-General, who has taken a personal interest in the setting up of the museum, which was inaugurated on August 17, explains the difference between commemorative stamps and definitive stamps.

The latter are the mass-produced simpler ones, designed at lower cost and available at all post offices. These are of less value to philatelists, who prefer to collect the commemorative and thematic series that are in fact miniature works of art, since they steal a march over those of many countries of the world.

If stamps are works of art in themselves, they can be combined in artistic ways too. Two framed collages, labeled Postage Stamp Art, made by an anonymous artist out of used stamps and inland-postcards, are displayed in the gallery. One is clearly the Qutub Minar.

The high-tech generation might prefer e-mail. But you have to admit, there is a grace to an envelope with a stamp on it that an e-mail printout can never match. Oh yes, snail mail is worth the wait any day. Having said that let me e-mail this piece before I miss my deadline!
