READERS FORUM

<Dear Reader, Your feedback is important to us as it helps evolve the newsletter. Please send us have your thoughts and suggestions.>

NIKHIL, Chennai

The National Parks set of 5 stamps which have been issued recently is a beautiful thematic issue from India. Such issues which have good exchange/trade market are few and far between. India is generally known to be issuing stamps only on personalities, and in my limited experience, this is one major reason why collectors back out after hearing 'India'.

As the Department had issued MS and sheetlets for other such good issues like Birds and Lakes, it would only be logical to bring out additional items for the Parks issue also.

Miniature Sheets, Sheetlets and Maxim Cards can be brought out at a later date, if possible. This has been the case for some of the earlier MSs like Indepex'73, Himalayan Ecology, etc.

MAINAK KATHIARA, Ahmedabad

Philisensex which has been started by Mr Krishnan and Mr Madhukar Jhingan will be a very good step in sustaining interest in Indian philately. Keep it up...

We need to reevaluate and enhance our stamps worth and with the Indian economy growing fast the spare extra income's spend will be reflected in the price of the stamps.

SURENDRA BHASKAR

The concept of Philasensex is most intriguing and exciting, If it provides on a periodical basis the price movements with a reference base year the increase in demand /supply as reflected in the current stamp market in India and abroad.

How exactly this is proposed to be done is not very clear and I would suggest the proponent to give a brief write up of the main features of such a indicator. Will the Philasensex be based on key issues of each post independence year, will it include definitives, will there be separate indices for Indian market and another for the International market. Will there be a separate index for used and for mint (MNH) etc are some of the questions that spring to mind.

I had in one of the previous issues raised this very issue of the acute need to stimulate the flagging hobby by infusing in it some monetary incentive and compensation to the stamp collectors who are investing their hard earned money to an increasing extent necessitated by the surge in the quantity of stamps issued each year as well as their value due to increased denominations. After all there is a dearth of reliable and logical valuation of stamps, and the presently only a couple of guides/catalogs are available, which are updated once in 2/3/4 years, which is far too long a gap.

With best wishes for the successful creation of the Philasensex and its monthly review as proposed

AKSHAY BORAD

First of all I want to thank you for publishing about our group in your news letter, there are lots of people who have shown their interest in joining our group after reading in your news letter. This shows how popular your news letter is.

Further I want to express my views regarding Philsensex and views expressed in article about it in your news letter published on 7th of June 2007

Though some commercial establishment dealing in philatelic material have promoted philatelic material as investment option, but it can't be seen as serious investment option as the prices will highly dependent on want of the person or persons want to buy the material and the trend of philatelic scene at that particular point of time. Like these days thematic and topical philately is more popular than traditional country collections, which were popular before.

USA is known to be a pure capitalist country and people there are known to exploit each and every mean where they can make money and lot of people have burned fingers who had seen philately as investment option there. Some of USA's earlier issues are selling for below face values and almost all the philatelic associations and clubs have negative opinions about philately as investment option and they prompt philately purely as hobby for pleasure.

Who is going to be benefited, if philately is promoted as investment option, philately, philatelists, or commercial establishments dealing in philatelic material? I think none of them, in first case let's assume that value of philatelic material will get appreciated if more and more people will be investing, in this case first of all the interest of serious collectors and philatelists will deteriorate as the price of material will get artificial inflation.

Secondly the prices of philatelic material will fall as availability of philatelic material will become more as people will buy more new issues and down the line the availability of material will be more as has happened with USA's 1940's issues. Remember both the situations are not good for healthy philatelic scene.

Further regarding Philsensex we should remember that there are no fixed prices for philatelic material, there are different varieties of same material according to physical condition of the same. The same material can be two or three times expensive depending on condition. And same material can sell for half the price if the demand is not there with its same period of time.

So the philately should be thought and pursued purely as hobby for pleasure and attempts to prompt it commercially should not be appreciated.

FEATURES & RESOURCES

HISTORY OF POSTAL COMMUNICATIONS IN INDIA

Part I - ANCIENT INDIA

India - the land with the highest number of post offices and postal workers today, is also the country with probably the most eclectic, yet effectual modes of mail conveyance used over a span of scores of centuries, befitting its diverse topography and compelling history.

The element of romanticism was very much evident in most forms of communication adopted in ancient India. The primitive drawings and heliographic characters found in caves and the carvings of the ancient temples and pillars are vibrant stories with messages of their own. They can be interpreted as messages symbolic of the ethos of that period that have traversed across time, down the centuries. Messages were also written on leaves and stones that have been the boon of archaeological discoveries. Yet the most remarkable and emotive method of communication was through music, the rendering of the flute tenor or the melody and pitch of a song, conveying very effectively a piece of good, bad or daunting news that was conveyed instantly across the village. Messages were also conveyed by the sounds of drumbeats and crude bushfires that even cut across hills and valleys.

The need to communicate was manifested in various ways. There are various references in the most ancient works 'RigVeda' of a dog 'Sarama' being used to carry message. The 'Atharvaveda' records couriers and names them 'Palagala'.

The mythology and the ancient history also records of traditional emissaries conveying messages in an unconventional manner. 'Ramayan' has many instances of Hanuman, being sent by Lord Ram to convey messages, flying over land and water, in particular the message to Sita who was kept hostage in Lanka. In 'Mahabharata', King Drupad dispatched the message to King Dhritirashtra to give away half the kingdom through the Royal Priest. Also from 'Mahabharata' is the romantic legend mentioning swan being used to convey the message of prince Nal to princess Damayanti.

Chanakya's 'Arthashastra' also mentions the efficient manner of collecting information and revenue data using doots, who also doubled up as spies for the King.

The practice of using homing pigeons as message carriers also prevailed from the earliest times and believe it or not still is being officially used by government departments in remote areas.

Then, of course, the legendary mail runner, who has stoked the passions of many a poet, writer and artist, who have eulogized him, was used by the Kings for purposes of invitation, chivalry and war. The mail carriers were also used by the merchants for the purpose of their business. The common man it seems either had little use for such a service or its cost were beyond his reach.

One of the earliest evidence of a systematic postal service using foot messengers is found during the reign of Chandragupta Maurya (322-298 B.C.). A courier service between the capital and the outlying provinces of the vast kingdom served the needs of intelligence gathering and collection of revenue data, whence regular messengers, doots (emissaries) and pigeons were used for conveying the royal communiqué. However its efficacy was lost upon his death and the system fell through. Emperor Ashoka also devised a very efficient means of communication that helped him create a vast empire.
