Investing In Art Works, Antiques, Coins & Stamps

Press Trust of India reported on April 22, 2011 that The Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI) may soon frame a stringent set of rules for funds investing in art works, antiques, coins and stamps, with an aim to check black money flow into these products and safeguard the interest of genuine investors.

SEBI considers investment funds focussed on art works, antiques, coins and stamps as "Collective Investment Schemes", which come under the ambit of the capital market regulator.

Fearing flow of illicit wealth into these funds and also a high level of risk posed by them to the general investors, SEBI is now considering framing a specific set of regulations for these funds, a senior official said.

Globally, art funds are very famous as an alternative class of investments for rich investors and have started gaining some ground in India over the past few years.
